

Christmas & New Year 2011/2012 service and engineering work information

The vast majority of the rail network will be unaffected by engineering work during the festive period and over 95% of stations will be open. However we do still recommend that you confirm your journey details by using the information contained within these pages or by using the Journey Planner.

During holiday periods, Train Operating Companies generally amend the train plan that they run and there are a number of reasons for this:

- Engineering work – Network Rail may be carrying out essential engineering work that requires the timetable to be amended and in some cases buses may replace trains over part of the affected route.
- Reduction in the number of commuter passengers – With many businesses closed for the holidays, passenger numbers for the Train Operating Companies that operate on commuter routes may be reduced. This may mean that the Train Operator will reduce the number of trains they run and in some cases it may be that a Saturday or Sunday level of service is offered instead of the normal weekday service.
- Increase in the number of leisure travellers – With many people taking the opportunity to get away for the holiday period, passenger numbers for those Train Operating Companies operating on routes to and from holiday destinations may increase. As a result those Train Operating Companies may run an amended service. This may mean there are additional trains at certain times during the day and/or fewer trains at other times of the day to cater for the additional passenger numbers.

In general for the 2011 Holiday period, train services will finish earlier than usual on Christmas Eve and New Years Eve, and start later in the day on the Bank Holidays (Tuesday 27 December & Monday 2 January). Don't get caught out! Check the times of the last train home on Christmas Eve and New Years Eve using our Journey Planner.

There are no trains running on Christmas Day (some buses will run for Heathrow, Gatwick & Stansted airports), and only a limited service running around the London and Glasgow areas on Boxing Day.

No trains run in Scotland on New Years Day, while some operators run additional early morning trains from London on New Years Day morning following the celebrations in central London.

A detailed summary of the train services being provided by each Train Operating Company over the holidays, details of the engineering work affecting their services, and details of last trains / additional trains on Christmas Eve, New Years Eve and New Years Day are shown on the following pages.

Details of London Underground, buses, trams and river services operated by Transport for London over the Christmas and New Year period will be available shortly from the Transport for London website.
